Never in the History of Chicago Were So Plany People Gathered.

The Rear Guard of the Parade Reached the Dispersing Point at 4 p. m., the Speciacle Having Lusted Six Long Hours-Sounds on the Streets Carried to the Homes of Hobart and McKinley-Commemoration of the Great Fire.

CHICAGO, Oct. 2.-Twenty-five years ago today the city of Chicago was laid waste by the most destructive fire that has ever wrought destruction in an American city.

vehicles and all traffic of downtown streets suspended.

Banners and flags were swung at frequent intervals across the streets.

Banners and flags were swung at frequent intervals across the streets, and from every tall building others floated, while the front of almost every building was a mass of red, white and blue. Many of the show windows were elaborately decorated in honor of the occasion.

Above the masses of people, above above the masses of people, above even the sky-scraping office buildings, rose a mighty roar, cheers, yells, music of innumerable bands, the tooting of horns, little and big, the penetrating bellowing of immense megaphones and the thousand and one other noises that

At two or three points along the line of march immense open-mouthed tele-phone receivers were attached to wire leading directly to the homes of Willfam McKinley and Garrett A. Hobart and to various eastern cities, into which were announced the names of each organization as the great column pussed, and then a mighty short would go up that could be heard miles away. Observation stands had been erected at frequent intervals, and not only were these filled to their utmost ca-pacity, but every building had its

Promptly at 10 o'clock, a cannon at the Lake Front park gave the signal for the parade to move. Immediately, General Joseph Stockton, who had charge of the vast army of volunteers, representing almost every branch of into this rule, and that was in the case of the older veterans of the civil war, who had been specially solicited to join the parade, and they were all provided with carriages. As these old warriors rode through the ranks of people, more than once a comrade on the sidewalk, recognizing a familiar face among those in the carriage, would send up a feeble cheer, which was no sooner heard than it was taken up and sy elled to a mighty roar of tribute to the grizzled defenders of the nation.

As the procession, with its platoon of blue coats and brass buttons at the head, moved slowly along the streets, it was preceded by a welcoming roar from the blocks of speciators that lined the roadway. The floats, and they were legion, roused enthusiasm and were greeted by cheers of admiration all along the line. One of the most generally admired of these greations was that of the iron and steel trades, which was gotten up in barbaric style, with a figure representing Vulcan sitting on an anvil.

Kinley said in 1890, in the report which accompanied his tariff bill, that agriculture was degressed and that there could be no general prosperity in this country so long as the farmers were not prosperous. Remember that this was said after a period of thirty years of high tariff. The only remedy which the Republicans now propose to better the conditions of the farmer is tariff. If tariff falled for thirty years to prevent agricultural depression, what reason have farmers to hope that it will be more successful now? (Cheers.) There is a cause which lies deeper than any system of taxation. So long as the gold standard prevails there must be a general fall in prices of agricultural products, whether we have a high tariff or a low tariff, and so long as the farmers, and the farmers cannot suffer without bringing in suffering to the other classes, which are dependent indirectly upon the farmer for prosperity." (Cheers.)
